Pearson, Mrs. Rufus Shapley, Miss Deborah A. Glover, Miss Lucia A. Warden, Miss Alice Pardee, Miss Grace Cooke Clarkson, Miss Katherine E. Register, Miss Henrietta B. Ely, Miss Edith H. Baily, Miss Eleanor S. Gamble, Miss Elizabeth Dale Oberteuffer, Miss Louise Wood and Miss Olive Wilson.

The dancing class for little girls and boys in Chestnut Hill gave a bal masque hat week at the Philadelphia Cricket Club, and it proved to be such a success that Miss Lockwood decided to repeat it this afternoon. All sorts of evening costumes will be worn, two tiny Betty Colahan; little Eleanor Houston went last week as an old-fashioned girl. There will be Red Cross nurses and Martha and George Washingtons in all their stately grandeur. Two tiny fairies were well taken care of last week by their nurse, who, caring nothing for the artistic, slipped sweaters on backward as the wings were sorely in the way, and the effect can be imagined. Altogether every one had a wonderful time and the kiddles can hardly wait for this afternoon.

One of the classes in preparedness, which Mrs. Carl Williams chaperones at her home at School House lane and Greene street, Germantown, meets this afternoon between 5 and 6 o'clock. Dr. Wilfred Fetterman teaches this class. It really is wonderful how deadly interested all our women are in this first aid and preparedness work. was highly amused one day last week, when a friend of mine, who was suffering from a gathering of some sort, and whose head was bandaged up to the nines, told me that a well-meaning and kind-intentioned girl had come to see her, and had told her, "Well, my dear, I can bandage your head for you, if you want me to." My friend shuddered; but then the kind-intentioned one con tinued. "We do it all the time at home now, just for practice."

Imagine the sensations of visitors to this household to find the family at Various intervals sitting around all bandaged up.

Yes, it's all very well now, but it would not be such fun, if under those handages were dreadful wounds and torn flesh and shrapnel-imbedded skin. May we only get as far as practice, if it can be, with honor, for we cannot want our fathers and brothers and husbands and lovers to undergo what those poor men in Europe are suffering. NANCY WYNNE.

Schmidt Quartet's Novel Numbers The Schmidt Quartet, one of the newer, but none the less efficient groups of chamber music players which have come into local existence in the course of the last year or two, gave a recital of decided musical interest and executive value last night. The Little Theatre, which environed players and hearers with the intimate atmosphere of the closet, which shut all else without, left only the under-standing soul and the inciting music to effect esthetic reactivity.

This music was unusual, and, by virtue of the novel quality, the program devi-ated in contour and character from any string quartet's program heard these several seasons. It was not that the pieces were new, for there was not a single absolute novelty on the list, though some were less familiar to our ears than to others; it was the collocation that served to eliminate the conventional, this and the fact that the Schmidt Quartet totally forgot it was a string quartet, except in the two movements played from Debussy's G minor (Opus 19). With the co-opera-tion of Marcel Tabuteau, first obolst of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Joseph W. Clark, planist, the Schmidts gave Mozart's F major quartet for obee, violin, violoncello and viola, and Dvorak's quintet in A major for piano, two violins, viola

Mr. Tabuteau added the facility of the virtuoso to the brolderies of woodwind which Mozart has braided into his Opus 30. His part in the proceedings afforded a very novel substitution for the first violin, the deak of whom he took. His grace of execution and community of musical interest with the others was again and again disclosed. In the Dvorak cultivity the strings asserted their hard. quintet the strings asserted their harmony. Messrs Emil F. Schmidt, first violin; Louis Angeloty, second violin; William A. Schmidt, cellist, and Emil Hahl, viola. gave convincing tasts of their quality as ensemble players of firm fabric and gen-uine insight into meanings in this num-ber. The cellist and planist, Joseph W. Clarke, also gave a great deal of pleasure in Grieg's Sonata for their instruments. W. R. M.
